WEARY OF LIFE.

Suicide of a Somewhat Notoriou Colored Politician.

00 Greenville Times. On last Tuesday morning, the notorious colored lawyer, J. D. Werles, drowned himself from the Greenville wharf-boat. He walked on the boat and asked a couple of dray-drivers "if they ever saw any one commit suicide?" They replied "No," when he said, "Well, watch me," and leaped into the river.

The causes that led to this singular occurrence are variously stated. He was in domestic and financial difficulties, and his future life was clouded by the result of the recent election.

Vote of Hinds County -- 1875. Hinds County Gazette. In publishing the vote of Hinds county at the late election, in our issue of a week or two ago, we omitted to include the vote of the Bolton precinct, as that box (having been destroyed) was not included in the official count. We republish the 00 statement below, inserting the vote at Bolton as it has been reported to us.

The Outlook. It looks to me as though the Democrats will permanently hold a majority in Con-gress. At every election the South be-comes more and more united, and the Congressional delegations more and more 2 00 solidly Democratic. Presently you will 2 00 find that it will require only about fifty Democratic Congressmen from all the 9 00 Northern States to assure that party conmay sweep over the land, you can not expect them to effect anything in this part of the country. After awhile the Senate will be on the verge of falling into the hands of the Democrats, for at every Senatorial election in the South they will assuredly make a gain. Wash, cor. Cin. Commercial. THE SOUTHERN LEADER Of the House is Colonel Lamar-I can not recall his alphabet of Christian names. "Have you not met him?" said Hon. Rayless Hanna to me, compassionately. I replied in the negative, and he exclaimed, "Then you shall." Suiting the action to the word, he may be said to have dragged the gallant Lamar like a lamb to the slaughter, for he prefaced our introduction with the amounteement of my calling, and fairly settled by into the nearest chair, as much as if to say. "Now

The look of constantation faded out of Colonel Lamar's face when he perceived my embarrassment, and he was soon in animated conversation. He was not quite a stranger to me. I recognized in him a gentleman who, more than once, had been seated in the dining-room just where my eyes would naturally rest in raising them from my plate. I was not aware of having seen him until thus placed face to face, and I found myself
